

You keep saying it's terrible, but what's so terrible?

*Unless a bomb is behind you or a building is collapsing, there's no need to panic.

*Everything happens for a reason.

We are now entering an ice age.

There's nothing to get worked up about unless it's something like that.

In this day and age... rather than a resurgence of historical wars, the decline caused by cyber hacking attacks is more frightening.

That's why security measures are so meticulous.

*AI-equipped drones

*Unmanned drones

Military forces around the world are increasingly opting for more effective
AI-driven combat rather than endangering their own soldiers.

The AI thinks and acts... and the results are monitored on a screen.

As long as you have the luxury of saying "This is so difficult," it's not really that difficult.

If it were truly difficult, you wouldn't even be able to speak.

Incidentally, recently, Bill Gates, who could be considered the founder of computer science, has publicly stated that "AI is the scariest thing."
