

The condition of employment is being human

My daily routine involves using two "junk" printers (multifunction devices)—which I bought as non-functional units on sites like Yahoo! Auctions—after repairing them myself.

*Just to clarify, a "multifunction device" refers to a machine that combines four functions:

① Printer, ② Scanner, ③ Fax, and ④ Copier.

Naturally, I don't use genuine ink; instead, I fill them with inexpensive, compatible ink, and for copy paper, I use the 100-yen packs from Daiso...

Of course, I can easily print from my smartphone via Wi-Fi, which makes things very convenient.

I've used a photo of the printer in my room as the cover image as proof...

This is a practical example of the idea that "an era is coming where you can do anything for free."

Fearing that everything might get taken over—and unable to find an employer willing to hire me—I ended up on public assistance.

I've been online for a long time myself, and while having your own website is something to be proud of,

I've never seen anything like this—especially a novel created in such a short span of time.

Exactly. And to think it was built for free, too.

The proof is that the site is currently inaccessible because traffic has exceeded the limit.

The title... "Employment condition: Must be human."

With the rise of AI, it's not entirely out of the question that we might actually need a requirement like that someday.