

Customer, your Omeshimono...

My mobile phone service has been down since September 16th, and even today I'm still using free Wi-Fi for shopping...

But I don't mean to brag.

I have a quote in my work: "There's always someone better, and someone worse."

I'm still one of the more fortunate ones.

Incidentally, yesterday I received a message from a Nagoya company that specializes in system design, saying that my website is the most amazing thing they've ever seen...

Thank you for the compliments.

I've also received quite a few messages from other companies... Thank you.

Incidentally, I told them I haven't spent a single yen on it, and that I run all the classes on Ekiten by myself.

They asked "Why?", and I answered, "Because I can do it all by myself."

I strive every day to become a "true professional" in every field.

By the way, is it fashionable to wear clothing with only one shoulder exposed?

Is it only in Japan? Or in Korea too?

"Omesimono" is a polite term for jacket, and I've written about it in previous works.

The fact that "Customer, your Omeshimono..." → I don't know where that's published.

It's counting as 438, but actually...isn't there closer to 500 works...?

By the way, since Bae Suzy is a classic beauty (a Showa-era beauty), I think her previous hairstyle was better...

Regarding the Harman/Kardon speakers

By the way, while I was wandering around the lobby of Okadama Airport...

As expected, people who didn't know me called out "AiUeto"...
