

My unique measures to customer harassment

If I were a staff member at a convenience store or hospital and encountered such a situation, I would say:

"I understand you must be very busy to be upset, so I would like to call your workplace to apologize.

I believe a direct apology would be more acceptable to them..."

Where should I put it next time...?

Come to think of it, I used to make banners on a large-format printer quite often.

Even when I was on a business trip to a regional training site, there were requests for large-format printing, so I sometimes used a large-format printer remotely, but so what...

The printer doesn't have a WAN IP address assigned to it.

In short, I use the printer on the LAN by logging into the internal LAN.

The compatible non-genuine ink I ordered from Amazon just arrived, so I replaced it.
